

Chinook Activist - Catherine Troeh

Catherine Troeh (1911 - 2007) was a historian, artist, and community activist - whose work spanned several decades.

As an active member and elder of the Chinook tribe and direct descendant of a great Chinook chief, Troeh worked alongside many other important Indigenous women activists in order to preserve Indigenous culture in the Northwestern United States. Together they helped found the Seattle Indian Center, American Indian Women's Service League, the United Indians of all Tribes, and The Seattle Indian Health Board.

Color the portrait to the right!

